George E. Williams, Jr. A.C.E. Joins Environmental Health Services, Inc.

Norwood, Massachusetts August 18, 2008 – Environmental Health Services, Inc. (EHS, Inc.), a Quality Pro accredited pest management company with 23 years in business in Norwood, MA is proud to announce George E. Williams, Jr has joined their organization as General Manager.

Williams spent the last 14 years with Univar USA and has over 20 year's industry experience including 17 years in chemical distribution. He is an associate certified entomologist and has numerous accreditations and industry awards. In 2007 he was awarded the prestigious Bartlett W. Eldridge award from the New England Pest Management Association (NEPMA). The award is the highest honor given by the association and is based upon dedication and support of pest management industry and association stewardship. Williams is also the longest running board member for NEPMA, holding several positions continuously since 1995.

“We are thrilled to have George join our team, I can't think of a more qualified person in New England” said John Stellberger, President. “George has the honesty, integrity, and business expertise that we have been known for since our inception in 1985. The addition of Williams to our management team will only enhance our long-term strategic vision, which is to become a leader of pest management services in the New England region.”

“I know many people were stunned by my decision but this position offered me a business challenge as well as professional and personal growth that I was looking for at this point in my career,” added Williams. “I always had the utmost respect for John and EHS, they are a classy firm and I am excited to be a part of their future” he said.

In his new role Williams will be responsible for helping shape initiatives and procedures in the area of internal operations, training, and internal/external sales- marketing.
