

Deer

There are more White tailed deer in Massachusetts now than when the Pilgrims landed.

These majestic animals can consume expensive ornamental plantings and vegetable garden plants, especially in winter when an ice cap forms over natural forage.

Several methods to protect plants are available:

- Taste repellants are applied on these valuable ornamentals to keep them from being consumed. It is a natural blend of garlic, pepper and putrescent eggs.
- Deer fencing can be installed to physically prevent access to your garden or yard.

These are the only two products we have tested and found effective.

Damage to a rhododendron
by White Tailed Deer

The damage to this conifer was caused by a White Tailed buck marking his territory